

Jonathan Orleans Quoted in Forbes Article on Covid Vaccination Incentives

January 16, 2021
Forbes Magazine

Jonathan B. Orleans, chair of Pullman & Comley's Labor and Employment Law practice, was recently quoted in a Forbes Magazine article on the risks and rewards for employers offering incentives, such as financial compensation or paid days off, to employees who get the Covid-19 vaccination.

While some companies think providing incentives will aid in ending the pandemic, others believe the decision to take a vaccine should not involve outside influences. John said "... providing employees with a financial incentive to get the vaccine is a fine idea, provided that employers don't leave themselves open to discrimination claims. An employee who can't be vaccinated due to a disability should probably be offered some alternative way to earn the reward."

Read the full article on Forbes.com.

Professionals

Jonathan B. Orleans

Practice Areas

Employee Benefits

Labor and Employment Litigation

Labor, Employment Law & Employee Benefits