

Environmental Considerations For School Construction

Education Law Notes

09.04.2014

By Jean Perry Phillips

School building projects are never something that school boards enter into lightly, fraught as they are with financial, political and educational considerations. As environmental attorney Jean Perry Phillips notes, the foundation of any successful school building project is due diligence, a critical component of which is assessing the presence of any environmental issues. Recognizing and addressing these concerns at the outset will ensure a more informed planning process and the potential for substantial cost savings.

To read the full article, please click here.

Tags: School Construction