

Good Housekeeping Quotes Retired Judge Lynda Munro on Flexible Co-Parenting During COVID-19

June 2, 2020

GoodHousekeeping.com

Retired Judge Lynda Munro, a member of Pullman & Comley's Alternative Dispute Resolution practice group and Family Law practices, was quoted on how families with divorced parents have largely been collaborating during the COVID-19 pandemic without the courts being open to address disputes. In many cases, partners who have been flexible and working together in co-parenting have been seeing benefits for both the child(ren) and parents; providing a variety of experiences for the child(ren) and allowing parents to work from home solo if and when it's needed.

Retired Judge Munro explains "In normal, non-COVID-19 times, roughly 85% to 90% of parents separating find ways to work out their differences [without court intervention]. There's no reason to believe that this statistic should vary during this public health crisis."

Read the full article here.

Professionals

Lynda B. Munro

Practice Areas

Alternative Dispute Resolution

Collaborative Divorce

Custody, Parenting and Relocation Litigation

Family Law