

Adam J. Cohen Explains the 2010 Revisions to the Common Interest Ownership Act

March 26, 2012

Hartford Business Journal

In 2010, the laws regulating condominiums and other common-interest communities were significantly revised to help associations run more transparently. In "A State of Confusion," Pullman & Comley Community Association attorney Adam J. Cohen explains how these changes affect the way these communities operate.

According to Adam, "The biggest changes in the 2010 amendments relate to the way meetings are held, the information owners are entitled to receive, and who pays for property damage."

To read the full article, please click here.

Professionals

Adam J. Cohen

Practice Areas

Condominiums, Residential Associations and Community Organizations

Municipal Law