Judge Lynda Munro (Ret.), member of Pullman & Comley's Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) practice, was quoted in the Connecticut Law Tribune article, "Conn. 'Collaborative' Seeks Shift in Dispute Resolution," an article about a new group of Connecticut attorneys acting as a "collaborative" practice to resolve disputes out of court.

According to Retired Judge Munro, who is a member of the group, known as Collaborative Business Dispute Resolution, "the vast majority of conflicts in civil matters are resolved outside the courtroom, and what we are looking to do is take that to the next step," in which parties take an active role and have an incentive to resolve matters amicably. "Business owners can continue in operation together."
