

PRESS RELEASE: Pullman & Comley's Annual Fairfield County Women's Networking Tea Highlights Mission of Project Return

May 26, 2016

BRIDGEPORT, Connecticut: On May 25, the first warm evening of the spring, more than 150 women gathered at the historic Stamford Museum and Nature Center to celebrate Pullman & Comley's annual Fairfield County Women's Networking Tea. Now in its nineteenth year, the event is hosted by Pullman & Comley's Women's Leadership Initiative and provides an opportunity for women professionals to network while also supporting the work of a local nonprofit organization.

"I am amazed at the level of energy created when dynamic women get together and share ideas," said Nancy D. Lapera, chair of Pullman & Comley's Women's Initiative. "What started out years ago as a small group of professional women, has grown to a respected and celebratory networking event where colleagues can reunite while also providing an opportunity for making new connections."

This year's event paid tribute to Project Return, a therapeutic group home that empowers young women in crisis to rebuild their lives in a safe and structured environment. Project Return provides a number of services, including residential, individualized treatment in a home-like setting for young women ages 17-23; an after school community service program, HEAL, for girls ages 14-18; and an aftercare program for up to six months after each resident leaves Project Return.
