Business and technology attorney Russell F. Anderson has published an article outlining the broad-based privacy law that Connecticut passed in May. Published in newhavenBIZ, the article outlines how Public Act 22-15 will give Connecticut residents broad rights to their personal data and impose many new obligations, especially for consumer-facing, medium-sized and larger businesses.

While many national firms will be familiar with the obligations imposed by PA 22-15 due to other state privacy laws, regional companies may be required to implement a privacy program for the first time.
